

APRIL 2005 – INDIANA NATIONAL AND STATE REGISTER LISTINGS

Joseph Jackson Hotel

2420 South Main Street

Vallonia, IN

The 1914 hotel is significant to the commercial history of Vallonia. The town was once an important trade center with rail stop that appears to have served the surrounding township and perhaps beyond. It is the only surviving commercial structure in town.

Honeywell Studio

378 North State Road 15

Wabash, IN

This is one of several properties associated with Wabash entrepreneur Mark Honeywell. The 1936 Honeywell Studio is being nominated for its unique role as a private entertainment center and retreat and for its Tudor Revival architecture. It was designed by Fort Wayne architect A.M. Strauss and is now the clubhouse for the Wabash Country Club.

Kokomo High School and Memorial Gymnasium

303 E. Superior St and 400 Apperson Way North

Kokomo, IN

This education complex consists of a school building with several additions and a nearly completely intact gymnasium. The oldest portion of the school dates to 1914. Although the school has undergone some changes, the school and gymnasium have had a singular role in the educational history of Kokomo.

Old Union Church and Cemetery

1125 E approx 3/8 mi. south of intersection of 700 South

Alfordsville, IN

The Old Union Church and Cemetery is a simple, rural, Greek Revival church and accompanying cemetery.

Both date to the early days of Daviess County— the cemetery began in 1830 and the church was built in 1858. The church retains its original features and a c.1900 bell tower, thus offering a high degree of integrity although it has not been used by an active church congregation since 1956.

Martin County Courthouse

220 Capital Avenue
Shoals, IN

Between 1820-1876 the county seat of Martin County moved nine times before officials settled on Shoals. The 1876 courthouse was associated with the county's political and governmental history from that point until the Martin County Courts vacated the building in 2002 and deeded it to the Martin County Historical Society for the county museum.

Lake County Sanatorium Nurses Home

2323 North Main Street
Crown Point, IN

This building is directly associated with a type of facility once common throughout the US. for treatment of tuberculosis. Most of those facilities have been lost or rehabilitated for other use as sanatorium therapy has given way to antibiotics. This building is a rare surviving example with, remarkably, a high level of integrity. Architecturally, the Colonial Revival style appears in the Crown Point area in smaller buildings but this is the only large scale example.

Andrew Nicholson Farmstead

12095 E. SR 550
Wheatland, IN

The property includes a well-preserved 1863 vernacular brick house, as well as an array of agricultural buildings. As such, the farm is a rare representative property that illustrates the origins and ongoing practice of agriculture in the county. The Nicholson's highly detailed personal account book permits researchers to present data otherwise only available in census records.

Vinegar Hill Historic District

Both sides of E. 1st St. from Woodlawn to Jordan and
S. Sheridan to E. Maxwell
Bloomington, IN

Vinegar Hill is a suburban area of Bloomington with strong ties to Indiana University and the local stone industry. The district includes buildings, sites, structures and objects throughout the area, many associated with stone mill families. The district is significant for its association with I.U. faculty and stone industry owners and workers and the architectural quality of the area.
